main drag. The Australian owners are cranking out exceptional coffees and a range of well-priced small bites. The smashed avocado on sourdough with tomato and fetta is the business.

How good is Cuca. Were it in Perth it would easily beat all comers for restaurant of the year. It should be a contender for the San Pellegrino Top 100. The food is staggeringly accomplished: modern without being cheffy or self-conscious, artistic without looking like a tot's tanty with poster paint. We've never said this before about any restaurant — it's flawless. And the best bit? Because you're in Bali, all this exceptional cooking comes in a fun, casual package. It's seriously committed to using local produce in jaw-dropping dishes such as "Cuban corn — grilled baby corn, young parmesan, fresh lime, parsley".
